Dell, William, d. 1664.
The increase of popery in England, since the reformation made by King Henry viii. Shewing the great encouragement that priests, Jesuits, and other promoters of that bloody religion have had from persons of power and authority . . . With a faithful extract out of the most authentic records of the most memorable things referring to the reformation, viz. King Henry viii. his reasons given in his proclamation for taking away the popes usurped power. His protestation against the pope. His injunctions to his clergy. Bishop Stephen Gardiner's oath or protestation, and his reasons against the popes supremacy in England. And the public agreement of the whole clergy of England, as confirmed and ratified in the book called The bishops book, published in the year 1554. Intended to be published in the year 1667, but seized at the press by R. L. S. and others. By the late Reverend William Dell . . . London, R. Janeway, 1681.
